Broad Tax Reform

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Milton Friedman (1999):

“The real cost of government -- the total tax burden -- equals what government spends plus the cost to the public of complying with government mandates and regulations and of calculating, paying, and taking measures to avoid taxes.

“Anything that reduces that real cost -- lower government spending, elimination of costly regulations on individuals or businesses, simplification of explicit taxes -- is a tax reform.”

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- President’s Economic Recovery Advisory Board chaired by Paul Volker
 - REPORT ON TAX REFORM OPTIONS: SIMPLIFICATION, ENFORCEMENT AND CORPORATE TAXATION, 8-27-10

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Volker Report (8-27-10):

“The tax code has become more complex and more unstable over the last two decades, in part because legislators have increasingly used targeted tax provisions to achieve social policy objectives normally achieved by spending programs.

“There have been more than 15,000 changes to the tax code since 1986, and a current JCT pamphlet lists 42 pages of expiring provisions.”

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Volker Report:

“Beyond these direct costs that can be measured in time, money, and revenue lost to noncompliance, the complexity of the tax system is a tremendous source of frustration to American taxpayers, reduces the system’s transparency, and undermines trust in its fairness.”

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Bipartisan National Commission on Fiscal Responsibility and Reform co-chaired by Alan Simpson and Erskine Bowles
 - THE MOMENT OF TRUTH, 12-1-10

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Simpson-Bowles Report (12-1-10):

“America’s tax code is broken and must be reformed. In the quarter century since the last comprehensive tax reform, Washington has riddled the system with countless tax expenditures, which are simply spending by another name. These tax [expenditures]— amounting to $1.1 trillion a year of spending in the tax code – not only increase the deficit, but cause tax rates to be too high. Instead of promoting economic growth and competitiveness, our current code drives up health care costs and provides special treatment to special interests.”

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Simpson-Bowles Report (12-1-10):
 - “The code presents individuals and businesses with perverse economic incentives instead of a level playing field.
 - “The current individual income tax system is hopelessly confusing and complicated.
 - “The corporate income tax, meanwhile, hurts America’s ability to compete.”

William C. Staley

Broad Tax Reform

- Simpson-Bowles Report (12-1-10):
 - “Tax reform should lower tax rates, reduce the deficit, simplify the tax code, reduce the tax gap, and make America the best place to start a business and create jobs. Rather than tinker around the edges of the existing tax code, the Commission proposes fundamental and comprehensive tax reform that achieves these basic goals....”
